USDA Internship Opportunities 2025 Recent Graduate For

Description

The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) is seeking recent graduates for its 2025 internship program. This opportunity is designed for individuals who have recently completed their degree and are passionate about contributing to the USDA's mission of promoting agricultural development, sustainability, food safety, and rural development. As an intern, you will gain hands-on experience, receive mentorship from USDA professionals, and contribute to impactful projects that support the department's diverse initiatives.

Responsibilities

- Assist in research, analysis, and program implementation within various USDA departments, including Agricultural Research, Food Safety, Natural Resources, and Rural Development.
- Collect and analyze data to support policy recommendations, program assessments, and decision-making processes.
- Prepare reports, presentations, and correspondence for internal and external stakeholders.
- Participate in meetings, seminars, and workshops to broaden your understanding of USDA's mission and initiatives.
- Support the development of communication strategies, marketing materials, and outreach programs.
- Perform administrative tasks as needed, such as data entry, file management, and scheduling.
- Collaborate with USDA staff on special projects and assignments related to agriculture, environment, food, and rural policy.

Qualifications

- Recent graduate with a degree in a relevant field (e.g., Agricultural Science, Environmental Science, Business Administration, Economics, Public Policy, Communications, or related fields).
- Graduation must have occurred within the past 2 years or be scheduled prior to the internship start date.
- U.S. Citizenship or permanent residency.

Experience

- No prior professional work experience is required. However, experience in agriculture, public policy, communications, data analysis, or related fields through internships, volunteer work, or academic projects will be considered beneficial.
- Demonstrated interest in agricultural policy, sustainable development, or public service is preferred.
